"One of the great difficulties in aeria! One of the great difficulties in aerial navigation, said Dr. Thomas to day to an Evening World reporter, 'is in the changing temperature of the gas in the air vessel. Often the sun heats the gas and causes it to expand, and it has to be let out to prevent the balloon from bursting. Then when you are submerged in a cloud, the gas is cooled and Goutracts and ballast must be thrown out or you come down. The next the submerged in a cloud of the gas is cooled and country of the prevent the submerged in a cloud.
